Eichmann Trial To Be Recorded By N. Y. Company For World-Wide Showing At Cost

A New York broadcasting company reported that it had signed an agreement with the Israeli Government by which it would make a complete television and film record of the trial of Adolf Eichmann.

The former Nazi German leader, charged with responsibility for the deaths of 6,000,000 Jews as chief of the Jewish section of the Gestapo, is to go on trial in Jerusalem early next spring, says the New York Times. Frank M. Smith, president of the Capital Cities Broadcasting Corporation, said his company would make the recordings and films available to all broadcasting and motion picture organizations throughout the world at cost.

If any proceeds are left over after payment of expenses, Mr. Smith said they would go to a charitable organization to be designated by the Israeli Government. Milton A. Fruchtman, executive producer for Capital Cities, who negotiated the contract in Jerusalem, said the company would use a new electronic technique for simultaneously producing video tape and motion picture film of high quality.

The exclusive contract, according to Mr. Smith, and Mr. Fruchtman, was signed on behalf of the Israeli Government by J. Kerun, a commander in the national police, who is responsible for trial security, and David Landor, head of the government press office.

Capital Cities is a five-year-old publicly owned concern listed on the American Stock Exchange. It owns and operates WTEN television and WROW radio stations in Albany, WPRO television and radio stations in Providence, R. I., and WTVD television station in Raleigh-Durham, N.C. Mr. Smith said he and Lowell Thomas were the largest stockholders.

The contract says: "It is anticipated that the said Eichmann trial will be an event of worldwide public interest, and that widespread dissemination of the trial proceedings through all available media of communication is a highly desirable social objective."

Capital Cities is getting exclusive rights to make recordings on a non-profit basis, and is required "to make available to all television stations, networks, any individual or group of individuals, newsreel companies and motion picture distributors and exhibitors throughout the world such video tape and/or motion picture film on an equitable and ratable basis, simultaneously in the State of Israel to representatives of companies of all the countries of the world which may request all or any portion of the trial proceedings as so recorded, such material at a price fixed by Capital Cities which shall not exceed the accepted world market price."

Mr. Smith said the company would have to provide equipment and personnel estimated to cost $500,000 or more for four months, reports the New York Times. The contract provides that the com-

U. S. Orthodox Rabbis To Serve 21,000 In India

The Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America announced plans for a permanent religious leader for the 21,000 Jews who recently formed a Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of India.

Moses I. Feuerstein, of Malden, Mass., president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregation of America, said the project would be carried out with the cooperation of the Rabbinical Council of America. Volunteer American rabbis will be assigned pending the selection of a permanent rabbi.

The announcement was made in a report by Mr. Feuerstein on the overseas activities of the Union, says the New York Times. He spoke at the banquet session of the organization's sixty-second anniversary biennial national convention in Atlantic City, N.J. The Union represents more than 2,500 who are affiliated Orthodox congregations in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Feuerstein told the 1,000 delegates that Rabbi Norman Lamm, associate rabbi of the Jewish Center of New York, would be the first volunteer. Rabbi Lamm will spend six to eight weeks in India.

Mr. Feuerstein said the plan was an outcome of an appeal to the Union last December by Saul B. Penkar, president of the Magen Hasidim Synagogue of Bombay, for aid in maintaining "strongholds of Orthodox Judaism in India." Rabbi Charles Weinberg, president of the Rabbinical Council of America, went to India last July and returned with a report of the need for a rabbi.

"It is not an easy task to find the right man," Mr. Feuerstein said. "Until we succeed in finding the proper personality — we will have to rely on visits of outstanding American rabbis who volunteer."

He also said scholarships were being obtained in Israel, Britain, and the United States for "gifted youths of the Bene Israel community of Israel who want to enter rabbinic seminaries and who pledge themselves to return upon their graduation to India to service their community."

Applicants, he said, would be screened in India by a committee of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregation of India, says the New York Times.

Efforts will be made to establish similar ties with the Orthodox in Central and South America. Mr. Feuerstein said that "there is a great deal of Orthodox strength still in existence in these countries" and that "we can build on this strength and nurture it." But, he warned, "time is running out."

The Union plans to send an emissary within a year to South America and, later, possibly to Central America, to prepare for a South American Conference of

Shoe Firm Head Rose From Errand Boy To Fame

A. B. Cohen, president since 1947 of the United States Shoe Corporation, died in Cincinnati, Ohio, at the age of sixty-seven years. His full name was Abraham Benjamin Cohen, but he preferred to use his initials. Mr. Cohen rose from jobs as a Boston newsboy and as an errand boy for a Boston shoe manufacturer, to the presidency of one of America's largest manufacturers of shoes, says the New York Times. His death ended a thirty-four-year association with Joseph S. Stern Sr., who was president of United States Shoe from 1931 to 1947, and has been chairman of the board since 1947.

The two men met in Cincinnati in 1926. Later Mr. Stern became president, with Mr. Cohen as vice president and general manager, of the Stern-Auer Company, shoe manufacturers in Cincinnati. That firm was merged in 1931 with the United States Shoe Company to form the present concern, the United States Shoe Corporation. At the time of the merger, the new company was making 700 pairs of shoes daily. It now manufactures 30,000 pairs a day.

In 1951, Mr. Cohen was chosen one of the sixty outstanding salesmen of the U.S.

The Joint Defense Appeal, which is the fund-raising organization of the American Jewish Committee and the Bnai Brith Anti-Defamation League, gave him an award for distinguished services on behalf of human rights in December, 1957. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt made the presentation.

Mr. Cohen was a member of the board of governors of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion; and of the board of trustees of the Jewish Hospital. He was active in the Community Chest, the Jewish Welfare Fund, and the American Red Cross.

He was a member of the Louisville Country Club and was a thirty-second-degree Mason.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Dolly Lurie Cohen, a philanthropist, whom he married in 1920; and their son, Ralph I. Cohen, who is with the Bureau of Standards in Washington.

Air Force Of Israel Gets First Plane Built There

The Israeli Air Force accepted delivery of the first aircraft built in Israel. The plane, a twin-engine, jet trainer and ground-support aircraft, is an adaptation of the French Fouga Magister, a standard trainer in several countries of the Atlantic Alliance.

At a ceremony, Premier David Ben-Gurion described the aircraft as the first built in the country in 3,700 years, since the "chariot of fire" in which Elijah "went up by a whirlwind into heaven." The difference, he said, is that the first flying craft never came back but the second one will, says the New York Times. The Israeli Magister is said to be identical in performance to its French prototype, but some modifications in armaments have been introduced.

Israel Aircraft Industries, a Government-owned enterprise, has received a license from the French manufacturers, Potez Air Fouga, to produce the trainer in Israel. Al. Schwimmer, managing director of the enterprise, said the jets would replace piston-engine Harvards and Steermans that the Israeli Air Force has been using as training planes. The capacity of the plant was not disclosed.

Mr. Schwimmer said markets would also be sought in some Asian and African countries. The French manufacturers have given Israel sales rights in all countries outside Europe and former or present French territories. The trainer will sell for $160,000.

The next item on the Israeli production schedule is an original twin-engine jet aircraft for executive passengers. It is designed for export, mainly to the United States. The first deliveries of the $250,000 plane are scheduled for 1963.

Israel Aircraft Industries was established in 1952 as an aircraft maintenance concern under the name of Hedek. Mr. Schwimmer was invited to go to Israel from California, where he had been running his own maintenance business.

Hedek has been able to underbid foreign competitors for heavy maintenance, overhaul, crash damage repairs, and other jobs. Consequently, the United States,

Says England Now Has Most Vital Jewry In Europe

A former chief rabbi of Ireland reported that since World War II the "Jewish center of gravity" in European religious life had shifted from Eastern Europe and Germany to England. He said England "has now by far the most vital and influential Jewish community in Europe."

The rabbi, Dr. Immanuel Jakobovits, now leader of the Fifth Avenue Synagogue of New York presented the appraisal at a symposium at a convention of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, at its sixty-second anniversary biennial national convention, in Atlantic City, N.J.

Rabbi Walter S. Wurzburger, of Toronto, Ont., told the delegates that American religious and lay leaders "must beware of becoming religious organization men."

The "ideal" of such leaders "must go beyond the achievement of a smoothly functioning and constantly expanding organization that operates according to the latest techniques devised by efficiency experts and high-pressure public relations men."

He asserted that the aim of true religion was not a powerful organization, but a "wholesome organism conducive to the growth of authentic spiritual values." What is needed most, he said, is "not only increased cooperation between individual congregations, but also the formation of a community of interests to make Judaism relevant to the needs of an age of upheaval."

Dr. Jakobovits said that, "in common with recent developments in America, Western European communities have experienced a veritable revolution through the phenomenal rise of yeshivahs (academies of traditional Jewish religious study) and Jewish day schools."

"Where formerly the alleged argument of segregation militated against parochial education, these schools today enjoy widespread popular and, incidentally, even state support," Dr. Jakobovits said.

This development, he said, is being witnessed "in nearly all European countries, even in a country where assimilation was previously rampant as in France."

Mrs. Marowits, mother of the groom, wore a gown of amethyst-coloured peau de soie, with a hat of matching material. Their corsages were of pale mauve orchids. Jamaican Jewry Affiliates With World Jewish Congress

The Jewish community of Jamaica, British West Indies, has affiliated with the World Jewish Congress, becoming the 64th member. The decision of the 300-year-old community was welcomed by Samuel Bronfman, of New York, chairman of the North American Division of the World Jewish Congress. The action of the community, which numbers about 1,400, follows a recent visit by Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, of New York, director of the World Jewish Congress international affairs department, for conference with local Jewish leaders.

Jamaican Jewry's main activities center around their synagogue, the Congregation of Israelites of Jamaica. The Congregation recently celebrated the 75th anniversary of their present synagogue and the jubilee of their leader, Rabbi Henry P. Silverman, in the presence of the Governor, the Prime Minister, and other local dignitaries.

In a letter to Aaron J. Matalon, president of the United Congregation, Mr. Bronfman welcomed the affiliation of a community whose friendship the World Jewish Congress "has long cherished." He noted that, in accepting the chairmanship of the North American Division a year ago, he had pledged to do all in his power to strengthen the international organization. The decision of Jamaican Jewry to affiliate with the World Jewish Congress supported Mr. Bronfman in his pledge and "inspires all of us to still greater efforts for Jewry." The World Jewish Congress now represents all major Jewish communities in the Western Hemisphere.

one and one-half cups sugar
two heaping teaspoons baking powder
one and one-half cups flour

Beat egg whites stiff. Slowly add the sugar while beating. Fold in the beaten egg yolks. Then slowly add the flour and baking powder which have been sifted together four times. Pour the batter into a greased, ten-by-fourteen-by-two-and-one half-inch pan which has been lined with waxed paper. Bake at 325 degrees for one hour.

one-tablespoon lemon rind
one-third cup sugar
one-half teaspoon vanilla

one tablespoon orange rind
one cup chopped nuts

Cream together the shortening, sugar, yolk of egg, vanilla, salt, and grated lemon and orange rind. Work in the flour. Shape dough into small balls and roll in unbeaten egg white, then roll in chopped nuts. Flatten each with a spatula or knife. Bake on greased pans, in moderate oven, 350 degrees, for twelve minutes. Swedish Non-Jew Gives $250,000 To Israeli Science

Axel Wenner-Gren, Swedish industrialist-philanthropist, a non-Jew, made a gift of $250,000 to the Weizmann Institute of Science in Rehovoth, Israel. The announcement was made by Meyer W. Weisgal, chairman of the executive council. The Wenner-Gren donation is to be applied towards the purchase of a new and faster electronic computer for the Department of Applied Mathematics. The Institute already has two digital computers which work on a 24-hour basis. During his week's visit to Israel, Mr. Wenner-Gren was made an Honorary Fellow of the Institute. Others thus honored include General David Sarnoff, Adlai Stevenson, and Nobel Laureates Linus Pauling, I. I. Rabi, Harold Urey, Felix Bloch, from the United States.

The scroll of Honorary Fellowship presented to Mr. Wenner-Gren by Professor Chaim L. Pekeris, Head of the Department of Applied Mathematics, cites Mr. Wenner-Gren for ". . . his genius for enterprise and magnificence which contributed greatly to the advancement of science in the world." The presentation ceremony was attended by Mrs. Vera Weizmann, widow of Dr. Chaim Weizmann, founder of the Institute and first President of Israel. Abba Eban, president of the Weizmann Institute, and Minister of Education and Culture, welcomed Mr. Wenner-Gren who stated that during his visit to Israel he had the opportunity to see at first hand what was being done to bring the wilderness back to fertility. He was impressed by the fact that both the Government and the people of Israel embody the scientific approach in their national and international outlook. He saw this as the most encouraging factor in the Jewish national renaissance in Israel and that "its most useful and promising expression was at the Weizmann Institute."

Mr. Wenner-Gren holds decorations from Sweden, Peru, Mexico, France, Poland, and Bulgaria. He has received honorary degrees from the Universities of Stockholm, Uppsala, and Gothenberg, in Sweden; and from the University of Cusco, Peru. He is an honorary member of the Academy of Engineering Science in Stockholm; and of the New York Academy of Sciences.

Nachum Sokolow, Master Of The Literary Portrait

BY ITZHAK IVRY, OF THE JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL, IN NEW YORK

One hundred years have passed since the birth of Nachum Sokolow, the Zionist statesman and diplomat, leader and orator. The centenial serves as a fitting occasion, in Israel and elsewhere, to commemorate the most prolific Hebrew journalist of two generations, and one of the most beloved leaders of World Zionism. A great deal has been written on Sokolow and by Sokolow himself about his activities as a Zionist leader and publicist. His books, "History of Zionism" (two volumes, 1919) and "Hibbat Zion" (1934), have become standard works almost immediately upon appearing in English in London.

His political activities during the period before the Balfour Declaration and his special achievements in the diplomatic field in Western Europe (Paris, Rome, and the Vatican) are well known. His role as chairman of the Jewish delegation to the Versailles Peace Conference was of primary importance. As chairman of the World Zionist Executive, and later as president of the World Zionist Organization, Sokolow made a significant contribution to Jewish public life, all of which is part and parcel of Zionist history.

It is our intention in this essay to deal mainly with Nachum Sokolow, the writer, editor, and the master of the literary portrait. Sokolow became a journalist very early in life. He was born in Wishograd, Russian Poland, and began his editorial apprenticeship first as an assistant editor of the "Hatzefira" in 1880, and then as an associate editor, when the editor, Chaim Zelik Slonimsky, was quick to appreciate Sokolow's talents. With the death of old Slonimsky, Sokolow became the editor of "Hatzefira".

Even before that, Sokolow distinguished himself by publishing a literary almanac, "Heasif" (1884), a great event in Hebrew literature at that time. The best writers and scholars of that generation contributed to "Heasif" which reached more than 10,000 subscribers, an astounding number at that time. The yearbook "Heasif" was continued for several years and was a forerunner of other important literary publications, some of them edited by Sokolow, like "Sefer Hashana" (1900, 1903, 1906). As a result of the literary and financial success of "Heasif", the first Hebrew daily, "Hayom", began to appear in Russia, and in 1886 Sokolow's weekly "Hatzefira" became a daily, as did its competitor, the weekly "Hamelitz." This brought about a tremendous change in the circle of Hebrew readership, which had broadened considerably.

It was Sokolow who was the great Hebrew publicist and editor in the remarkable epoch between the early period of Smolenkin's "Hashachar" and the time of Ahad Haam's "Hashiloah." Nachum Sokolow not only encouraged new talents in all fields of literary and scholarly endeavor, but became a veritable fountainhead of Hebrew renaissance, in the best sense of the word, even before joining the Zionist fold at the First Zionist Congress where he became a devoted disciple and admirer of Dr. Herzl. Like every man of extraordinary brilliance and manifold talents, Sokolow was basically modest, but at the same time, he was well aware of the importance of the five years (1880-1885) in the history of modern Hebrew literature and of his role in it. In a touching essay about the eminent poet, feuilletonist, and translator, David Frischmann, Sokolow says:

"This was the time of the dying sunset of Haskalah. The world of Hebrew literature was full of flowery language and charming blabber. The 'world' of literature? Is not this word a terrible exaggeration? The question is not so much of whether there are talents. Talents and tastes are a matter of chance. Sometimes they are common and then, again, rare. It is also not a matter of literary quality of books and publications. The real question is: Is it a literature? The yardstick for a living and developing literature is the number of readers who understand, admire, and become influenced by it. If there is a considerable number of readers in all walks of life, and many people read and study these books and papers which reflect the spiritual image of the nation, then and only then it is real literature.

"From this point of view, I state with all determination that modern Hebrew literature was created first in the years 1880-85. I mean it not only in the sense of quality but also in its very essence. Let's assume that better books were written before, although seldom, but what difference does that make? What can good books do and what is the use of the best newspaper and what is the advantage of a fluent writer when his work and influence are separated from the broad public and enclosed in a narrow circle?

"Hashachar had about 700 subscribers in its best years; Hamelitz had 1200 subscribers in its Odessa perjod. When I entered Hatzefira Weekly in 1880, the number of subscribers was 1200. All the Hebrew publications together had barely 4000 subscribers, and the number of Hebrew book purchasers was even smaller. Heasif was the first modern Hebrew publication which found a way to the people. Within a few months we reached the figure of 10,000 subscribers. The next issue of Heasif had 12,000 subscribers, and it was a good sign that competition developed and another yearbook by the name of Knesset Israel appeared. Later came Otzar Hasifruth and Knesset Hagdolah. I want to emphasize that I am not discussing here the business aspect of publishing. I am discussing the literary value of this phenomenon. Hebrew literature began to grow and to develop what was to become later the literature of a people".

For more than sixty years Sokolow was prominent in Hebrew life and letters. Even during his period of political and diplomatic activities, when he considered it his duty to desist from participating as a publicist in internal political controversies in Jewish and Zionist life, he did not put down his pen for a moment. And when he died, in 1936, in London, he was found at his writing desk, because writing was his main task and joy in life. He was a natural writer and a tremendously prolific one. In his early years at Hatzefira he sometimes filled the whole newspaper with articles, essays, feuilletons, and lively travel descriptions.

His style continuously developed with the times. Although in his youth he was clearly under the influence of the Haskalah writers, his tremendous knowledge of Hebrew sources, the Bible, the Talmud, and the Midrashim, as well as latter rabbinical literature, and his constant and avid interest in the development of European and Hebrew literature made him a main participant in the regeneration and growth of the Hebrew language.

In his younger days, Sokolow tried his hand at poetry and drama, and also wrote a novel about Rabbi Yomtov Lippman Heller ("Tzadik VeNisgav"), 1882; and another novel, "Neurei Hanesher", about the period of Bar Kochba (1901); he composed a biographical dictionary of contemporary Jewish writers (1889), a literary lexicon much needed in those times, and a book about Spinoza (1929). He also published a geography of Palestine, "Eretz Hemda", and translated several important works from other languages into Hebrew, among them, Dr. Herzl's "Altneuland", which he named "Tel Aviv" (1902). He planned a dictionary of the living Hebrew language, and he invented hundreds of new words and expressions. He loved to revive old and forgotten expressions from the treasury of the Talmud, and the rabbinical literature. His phraseology is sometimes ornate, but always his own, and never artificial. He loved the broad canvas, and the flowing forms of essay and speech, not considering brevity of essence in the art of writing.

It is the fate of the journalist that his work is often short-lived. Sokolow's journalistic fate was no different from that of many other eminent journalists of his time. But Sokolow was not only an eminent journalist and a fine editor, he was also a man of many talents and a great scholar in many fields. As every great personality, he was a product of his environment, a worthy offspring of a rabbinical family and of a Chassidic community in Poland. Even when he became an adherent of Haskala, he never broke with tradition. He remained attached to it, and to Talmudic study, all his life. It may be one of the reasons why so many religious Jews, Chassidim, and Mitnagdim alike, read his "Hatzefirah" and became influenced by it, while they considered the "Hamelitz" an anti-religious publication.

This is also one of the reasons why his appeal to Rabbinical circles, "Le Maranan Ve'Rabanan", on the question of Zionism and the return to Zion (1901) made a deeper impact on so many religious Jews of Russia, Poland, and Lithuania, than did the message of any other leading Zionist. While he showed throughout his long life a tremendous capacity for spiritual regeneration and literary growth, he always remained essentially conservative, with a basically positive approach to tradition and with deep love for the cultural and religious legacy of the Jewish past.

His abhorrence of extremism of any kind, and his natural friendliness and generosity, made him a constant follower of "Beth Hillel" in many critical situations, both as a writer and as a most prominent public servant, an ambassador-at-large of the Jewish people. Although by nature a man of mediation and compromise, he knew no compromise when the basic values of the Jewish people and of Jewish history were at stake, because the spiritual values of Judaism, the unfathomed treasures of the Hebrew language and culture, and the innermost characteristics of Jewish peoplehood, as mysterious as they were eternal, were the most sacred things in Sokolow's life.

pany is to keep on recording the entire trial, or forfeit $100,000 as penalty.

The headquarters of the company is at 24 East Fifty-first Street, New York. One reason it won the contract, Mr. Smith said, was because it is a relatively small independent, rather than one of the major competing networks. He said its gross sales this year would be about $6,500,000, with earnings near $1,000,000 after taxes.

There have been inquiries from virtually every nation in the world to the Israeli Government about television or motion picture recordings, Mr. Fruchtman said. The 34-year-old producer said he first corresponded with the government about the desirability of making a historical record last July, and went to Israel in August.

He said he had convinced Israeli representatives that the recording system would not be noticeable or interfere with the dignity of the court. Cameras are to be placed on an overhead balcony. In addition, a closed-circuit television system will be set up for news representatives who are not able to crowd into the court room.

The trial will be in Hebrew, with simultaneous translations in English, German, and French, all of which will be recorded, Mr. Fruchtman said. The recording technique has been developed by the Videotape Workshop of the International Screen Directors Guild in the past year, and the machines have been manufactured by the General Precision Laboratories, Mr. Fruchtman said. Mr. Fruchtman first went to Israel in 1952, to work with Columbia Pictures on the Rita Hayworth film, "Salome." He met and married an Israeli girl, and since then has worked with his wife in fifty-three countries, says the New York Times. With Capital Cities for the last four years, he has produced, among other things, the Lowell Thomas "High Adventure" television series.

"Considering that the religious fortresses of Eastern and Central Europe have been completely obliterated, the resurgent power of Orthodoxy in Western Europe is little short of a miracle," he said.

He also noted that the European rabbinate was moving toward greater Orthodoxy, and that some congregations were shifting toward non-Orthodox standards. But he said these congregations should not be discounted as "lost to the cause" of traditional Judaism.
